Overview

With almost two decades of experience in the legal industry, Genevieve has a background working in both top-tier and boutique firms, primarily in the corporate and commercial spheres.

Genevieve specialised in banking and finance law, before moving into the field of competition, regulatory and consumer protection law at a top-tier law firm. In this capacity she represented large industry organisations, including many Australian financial institutions and major retailers. Genevieve regularly made submissions to the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission and appeared before the Australian Competition Tribunal. She also created and delivered in-house compliance programs for numerous nationwide corporations.

Genevieve subsequently joined the in-house corporate legal team of Australia's largest insurer, where she provided advice in areas ranging from procurement, to media affairs, advertising and contract law.

Genevieve moved into the realm of knowledge management with a boutique Sydney firm. She initially worked as a dedicated Professional Support Lawyer within their competition and regulatory team, before moving to a nationwide firm an Information Management Consultant, broadening her areas of expertise across the commercial and corporate spectrum.

In this role she was responsible for providing information management support to a range of specialist legal teams (ranging from banking and finance to corporate and commercial, construction, property, mining, insolvency, intellectual property, environment and planning and pro bono). Genevieve specialised in legal drafting, also delivering training on plain English and legal writing, and regularly presenting on developments in legislation and case law.

Genevieve has also recently been retained as a consultant legal editor with the international legal publisher, Lexis Nexis.
